ABSTRACT

A revision of the 1989 publication, this directory was compiled in order to help parents and professionals involved with Head Start home-based programming in meeting the needs of young children and families. The directory lists a broad range of guides and resources on topics related to Head Start home-based programs. Each listing provides the resource title, supplier or author, resource type, description, and appropriate audience or users. Resources include books, guides, films, and videos. The sections of the directory are: (1) Administration (including information on choosing, funding, and coordinating the home-based option; staff training needs, recruitment, and selection; and advocating for services and program planning and solving strategies); (2) Education (including resources related to language development, socialization, behavior management, child development, individualization, screening and assessment, multi-cultural and non-sexist literature, and transitioning children to elementary school); (3) Disabilities (including material on advocacy, support groups, legal rights and responsibilities, behavior problems, testing and evaluation, family adjustments, and sibling issues); (4) Health (including medical, dental, and mental health resources, as well as nutritional services, safety, and first-aid); (5) Parent Involvement (including information on gifted children, support groups, behavior management, and general parenting); and (6) Social Services (including information on identifying difficulties, preventing and remedying problems such as abuse and neglect, making referrals, alternative families, families in crisis, and conflict resolution and cultural differences). Appendices include listings of agencies and organizations, newsletters and journals, toll free numbers, and training and technical assistance resources. An index to Spanish-language materials and organizations is included. (BGC)

This Directory was prepared under Contract Number 105-90-1517 of Department of Health and Human Services, Administration for Children and Families by Trans-Management Systems Corporation, 1025 Vermont Avenue, N.W., Washington, DC 20005.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Trans-Management Systems Corporation expresses its appreciation and recognizes the contributions of time and expertise made by many people and organizations that participated in the completion of this document.

The editor wishes to express her gratitude to Martella Pollard, Head Start Bureau, Administration on Children, Youth and Families, the Federal Project Officer, who's continuing support, review, and careful criticism provided guidance at each stage of the preparation of this directory. In addition, we wish to thank E. Dollie Wolverton, Michele Plutro, and Trellis Waxler of the Head Start Bureau, Education Services Branch, for the valuable contributions they made in planning and reviewing the resource directory.

We also acknowledge the important contributions made by the following Head Start programs that provided us with valuable input: Champlain Valley Office of Economic Opportunity, Burlington, Vermont; Knoxville County Community Action Committee, Knoxville, Tennessee; Lakes and Pines CAC, Inc., Mora, Minnesota; Child Inc., Austin, Texas; Panhandle Community Services, Gering, Nebraska; Bear River Head Start, Logan, Utah; Child-Parent Centers, Inc., Tucson, Arizona; Rural Alaska Community Action Program, Inc., Anchorage Alaska; and Central Tribes of the Shawnee Area, Inc., Shawnee, Oklahoma.

To Martha Perske who graciously gave permission for Head Start to use her illustrations from the Abingdon Press book, Hope for the Families, by Robert Perske. These drawings reflect some of the magic and wonder that touches all people who work with young children.

We express special thanks to the staff and consultants of Trans-Management who contributed in the preparation of this resource directory: Candice Walker and Katherine Simmons, Administrative Assistant, who processed the Handbook.

INTRODUCTION

There is a richness and diversity in Head Start Home-Based programming that is unparalleled in other educational settings. It relies on the creative energy and enthusiasm of the home visitor, the advocacy and cooperation of family and community members, and the foresight and commitment of administrators, coordinators, and trainers. This team of parents and professionals is constantly being challenged to adapt, improve, and individualize services to meet the particular needs of young children and their families who receive home-based programming. No one person or organization can be expected to know of, or gather together, all of the information necessary to produce and maintain such excellence of service, unassisted.

The Head Start Home-Based Resource Directory was developed in 1989 as a partial response to this need. This revised version is a result of a nationwide update of the listings of exemplary books, curriculums, audiovisual materials, bibliographies, and other current resources that the home-based programs may find helpful. Inasmuch as Head Start regulations require that comprehensive child development services be provided in the Head Start home-based program option, this resource directory contains materials in the areas of Administration, Education, Disabilities, Health, Parent Involvement, and Social Services. In addition, appendices contain a section on agencies and organizations that may relate to home-based programming, plus newsletters and journals that will facilitate information exchange, a list of toll-free numbers for quick reference, and a listing of professionals, programs, and agencies that provide training and technical assistance to Head Start home-based grantees.

There are a couple of ways to access information from the directory. In each of the six topic sections, resources have been listed alphabetically by title. Information on where and how such a resource can be obtained is included. One index lists the resources alphabetically by title. Another index lists resources which are available in Spanish.

This directory is designed to provide a broad base of information on a variety of related topics concerning Head Start home-based programs. It may stimulate further investigation for specific materials or may inspire development of new materials or the adaptation of existing ones. We hope it will be seen and used for expanding, revising, and creating the best Head Start home-based programs possible.

Administration

The Administration section of this resource directory has a variety of materials that are useful to program planners, supervisors and administrators who are involved with home-based programming. It is a quick reference for those seeking information on choosing, funding, and coordinating the home-based option. Listings address staff training needs, recruitment, selection, evaluation; general information on advocating for services and program planning and solving strategies are included.

There are many resources that apply specifically to Head Start programs and will be most useful in that context. In addition, materials that focus on research, record keeping, job descriptions, Child Development Associate (CDA) credential requirements and program costs are also included. Effective administrative planning is a prerequisite to successful program implementation, and these entries help to provide resources that enhance and enrich home-based programming.

Education

The Education resources listed in this section of the directory assist the home visitor in planning and implementing home visits. General information on language development, socialization, behavior management, child development, and individualization are found here. Resources that relate to screening and assessment, multi-cultural and non-sexist literature, as well as transitioning children to elementary school are also included.

There are many resources that provide extensive information on curriculum development and others that deal with learning activities, games, songs, and teaching materials that can be used during home visits. Additional listings are in the Parent Involvement and Health sections of the directory.

This is only a partial listing of the rich and varied resources available to enhance Head Start home-based educational programming. Many excellent materials have been developed for local or regional use. Listings in this directory are a point of departure, not all inclusive.

Health

This section of the directory contains a comprehensive list of books, films, videos and other resources related to health. Home visitors who provide a broad range of services will find materials on medical, dental, and mental health, as well as nutritional services, safety and first aid. Some of the entries focus on wellness, coping with stress, prevention of illness and early intervention. These materials will assist in planning for the preschool child's physical, emotional, cognitive and social development and enhance the relationship between families and the ongoing health care system.

A quick review of titles helps the reader to identify information on a particular issue and also become familiar with other material that may be useful when working with families on home visits. Some of the resources contain activities for teaching health and safety concepts to young children; many have bibliographies that will provide additional information for the home visitor or family member.

Parent Involvement

Parent Involvement is a major part of the underlying philosophy and commitment of the Head Start program. The family is recognized as the primary influence in the physical, emotional, social, and intellectual growth of the child. The work of the trained home visitor as well as the regularly scheduled socialization activities support and enhance the ability of parents to act effectively as teachers of and advocates for their children, at home and in the community. These resources assist the home visitor in linking parents to community and program resources and enhance the ability of parents to foster their child's growth and development.

Current and appropriate information on gifted children, support groups, behavior management, and general parenting is found in this section. There are also numerous resources available for working with parents and involving them in parent education programs. Suggestions for books, tapes, activities, toys, and games, as well as several bibliographies are included. Many of the resources listed in other sections also help the home visitor in coordination of services across component areas such as health and social services, and reflect the goal of integrated comprehensive Head Start programs.

Social Services

In keeping with the Head Start program goal of advocacy for families in the community, resources in this section of the directory address the special needs and issues that relate to families. Many of the materials listed discuss identifying difficulties, preventing and remedying problems such as abuse and neglect, and making referrals. They also provide information on alternative families, families in crisis, conflict resolution and cultural differences, with the ultimate goal of helping families to help themselves.

Since home visitors are often the first to become aware of family problems or of inadequate support systems during times of crisis, this list of resources provides information on basic intervention strategies, family dynamics, and other related issues. It helps answer questions about when to intervene in a situation and when to refer to an agency or more qualified individuals.

Because there is as much diversity in families and their problems as there is in finding solutions or supports, this list is a place to begin designing your own programs and the home visitor is encouraged to expand in whatever direction seems appropriate. Agencies, journals, newsletters as well as the toll-free numbers listed in the back of the directory provide further resources.
